I Cor. 6:11; Gal. 2:16; 3:11.â€•2 The ground of justification is Christâ€™s sacrificial death and perfect obedience to the law (i.e., â€œthe righteousness of God,â€• Rom. 3:21). When a man by faith lays hold of Jesus Christ and His merits, God imputes that personâ€™s guilt for sins past, present and future upon Christ on the cross.

Gravity is the efficiency. Faith is the efficiency of justification, and being so is an ordinance of God. Another term, â€œgospelâ€• or â€œevangelicalâ€• obedience, refers to works done after justification, and in response to it. These works are contrasted with meritorious works done prior to justification, in an attempt to earn it.

relation. Justification by faith is not a final procedure; it looks to something beyond itself to be accomplished in the future. And it is an important factor in the accomplishment of that something. To demonstrate this we must notice another distinction, to wit; that justification is to be distinguished from salvation.

guilty man does not deserve â€œ not just justification and righteousness, but that justification and righteousness are acquired through faith. The principle of justification by grace is clearly established in Scripture. It is a foundation principle in Paulâ€™s treatise on the Gospel.

Justification - Contending for the Faith once Delivered

Justification by Faith Alone Genesis 15:6; Romans 4:1-5 The late theologian John Gertsner once spoke to a group of business people on the subject of justification. There was a reporter from a local newspaper in attendance. Gertsner preached the great doctrine of justification as emphatically, clearly, and persuasively as he knew how.
